

Latest Pictures of the Great British Strike

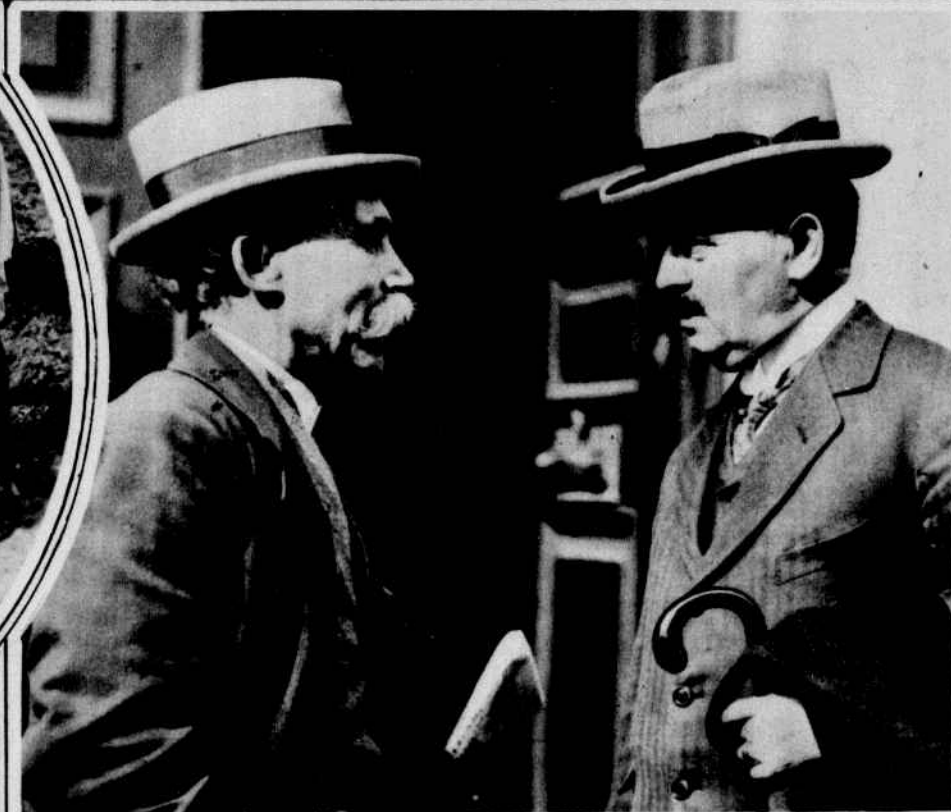

After one of the many strike conferences at No. 10 Downing street: Sir Eric Geddes (at right) and Sir Alfred Mond, M. P., representing Swansea, Wales, the great coal centre. Photopress.

Many of the reservists called to the colors in the strike crisis were colliers. Picture, taken in South Wales, shows a group handling German machine guns. Copyright, Farrington.

Above.—Even the miners themselves suffer from the coal shortage. At the Vivian pithead, Western valley, children sifting coal from the pithead. Copyright, Farrington.

Conference of the owners and miners' leaders at the Board of Trade: Bob Shirkey, representing the "safety men," talking to Sir Adam Nimms, head of the Scottish Coal Owners Association. Topical Press.

At left.—Dr. MacNimara, Mr. Lloyd George and Col. Hankey, leaving one of the important strike conferences that resulted in avoiding the Triple Alliance walkout. Copyright, Farrington.

Military supply train en route to the great coal docks at Cardiff, Wales, one of the most important points being guarded. Copyright, Farrington.

Welsh colliers and their families delight in singing under all circumstances. Picture shows a Welsh lassie (on old barrel) leading a juvenile choir assembled around a pithead. Copyright, Farrington.

Sir Robert Horn arriving at No. 10 Downing street, Lloyd George's house, for one of the strike conferences. Photopress.

The call for volunteers to meet the British strike crisis drew many women who had done war service. Photograph shows a line at the office in St. James street waiting to be enrolled. Photopress.